

“It is the sum of all our gifts
that makes a difference.”

– Michael Barak
President, Board of Trustees

Each June, another class of extraordinarily well prepared Sequoyah students graduates into a new world. Generations change, yet Sequoyah continues to be a community in which the school's founding values and underlying relationships are cherished.

We honor and reflect the vibrant ethnic diversity of Southern California, knowing that a school which establishes a rewarding context for engagement and inquiry fosters individual expression and productive collaboration.

Families invest in our community in many tangible and intangible ways – cultivating vegetables in our Gardens for Learning, donating equipment to the Thinkering Tank, assuring the fundraising success of our annual auction, writing in-depth articles for the Phoenix magazine, choreographing the class play, serving on clean-up crews after a Hot Lunch, teaching Options classes, accompanying field trips – these are just some of the examples of how parents may contribute. Volunteer opportunities forge a bond with the school and other families that can't help but enhance your child's experience at Sequoyah. Financial contributions help to secure the school's future and sustain a founding commitment to socioeconomic diversity. It is the sum of all our gifts that make a difference.

Sequoyah's board of trustees continues to focus on future strategic challenges and opportunities, yet we are mindful that the work we do is to secure our long-held mission: A Sequoyah education challenges the mind, nurtures the heart, and celebrates human dignity.

In many ways, we do our best work by doing it with each other.

Welcome to Sequoyah!
